T. W. MINTON & SON.

Barbourville is a distinctive town, and in many ways stands in a class to herself. She has opportunities and resources that are not found in all towns and cities throughout the land. Her enterprises are among the most substantial and progressive, while her citizens are a live, wide-awake people who believe in the town and her future, and are ever ready to do all in their power to promote her welfare. Among the distinctive and progressive manufacturing establishments in Kentucky, there is not a one that out classes that of T. W. Minton & Son, of this city known from coast to coast, and from the lakes to the gulf for the superior products in Hickory putting on the market. Few people in the country, however, realize what a business this is—what a factor it is in the manufacturing world, and Barbourville is exceedingly proud of the fact that such a plant is operated and maintained within her limits.

This firm manufactures everything that can be cut out of a hickory log, and shipped to all points in the U. S. and Canada. It is one of the most modern and perfectly equipped factories in the country. The newest and most improved machinery known to the trade is employed in this vast establishment. Everything is of the most modern type and conducted along the most scientific lines. It is like clock-work throughout. The hickory logs and lumber are bought by the firm wherever obtainable, but it may be said that most of them come from Kentucky, Tennessee and Virginia. Upon reaching the plant they are unloaded with a derrick and prior to being put under the saw, each and every log is washed in hot water. This is done to dislodge the small rocks and grit that might be imbedded in the bark, and to soften the bark so the saws will not dull so quickly. These logs are sawed into almost innumerable sizes, turning out products for every conceivable use from small dowels to buggy poles. A recount of the various uses to which the hickory timber is used, will be necessary in order to give the reader a true conception of the importance of this establishment. Few there are who spin around the streets of large cities and tour the country in automobiles, who have the faintest idea that the spokes and rims in the car in which they are riding, were made right here in Barbourville by T. W. Minton & Son, but it is true nevertheless, this firm supplies a large quantity of them, more possibly than any other one firm in the world. Each and every car has its own size and style of spokes as well as rims. The writer of this article was shown a portion of a made-up order of $2,000,000 club turned spokes for the Ford car alone.

Auto rims of various sizes and dimensions were also in great evidence. But the firm does not stop with auto parts, such as mentioned in the foregoing, but manufactures buggy shafts, poles, cross bars, single-trees etc. They also make a specialty of golf shafts, ladder rounds, chair rungs, dowels which are used in furniture making of various descriptions; handles for axes, hammers, farm utensils of every kind. The firm supplied 500,000 golf shafts to one firm last year, the largest manufacturers of goods of this character in the United States, expects to ship not less than 500,000 the coming season to the same firm.

It is an immense business, and one cannot really appreciate its worth in the community, or what a factor it is to the outside world, until a personal visit is made to the plant. The capacity of the plant is 10,000 feet per day which to the untutored means a carload daily, of finished stock or 2,000,000, feet annually. They employ two expert inspectors to grade and handle all stock before shipping.

The firm is composed of three members of the Minton family: Mr. T. W. Minton, the senior member and father; Mr. R. B. Minton and Miss Nola Minton. Each one has his and her respective duties to perform, Miss Minton being the head of the buying and selling department and the office. The work is upon her shoulders, to find market for the products and to make collections, pay off the employees, keep up the correspondence and look after all matters pertaining to the office, and a more competent person could not have been selected to fill the position. She is business throughout, and as energetic and full of the affairs of the company as any man could possibly be, and by her agreeable manners, courteous treatment to her employees she never has the slightest friction among the large force of skilled workmen employed by the firm, which numbers about thirty-five men. There is nothing about the plant that escapes her, and with which she is not thoroughly familiar. Mr. T. W. Minton has been connected with the hickory business for upwards of 40 years, and he too knows its every detail, being one of the most skilled and experienced men in the business in the entire country. Mr. R. B. Minton is at the head of the sawing and Manufacturing department, seeing to it that each and every "cut" is made to count in the profits of the business. There is really nothing wasted in this modern and up-to-date plant, as the smallest pieces are utilized for something; even the sawdust and shavings being conveyed to the boiler and used for fuel. "We have made the business a study," said Miss Minton, "and have found out how to utilize everything pertaining to the hickory log, excepting the smoke, and noise from the engine and saws." And this seems to be literally true, for nothing was observed going to waste in the large establishment. This is one of the most thoroughly reliable firms in the country, and the members are highly esteemed citizens of Barbourville.

E. W. Roach.

A store that keeps a well selected stock of general merchandise is the one that usually gets the trade of the public, and especially when the character of goods is the best and the prices most reasonable. Mr. E. W. Roach, one of the town's most popular merchants, owns and conducts just such a place. His store is at the old Faulkner stand, which is well known to most citizens of the town and community. In this establishment you will find everything that is usually carried in an up-to-date and well-stocked store, for Mr. Roach is a man of long experience in the merchandise business and has on his list of customers many of the most exclusive buyers in Barbourville, and Knox county. They have found that the goods bought of Mr. Roach are always dependable and sold at the most reasonable prices. It matters not what you want in dry goods, notions, shoes, clothing, fancy and staple groceries, etc., you will be sure to find it at E. W. Roach's. He is thoroughly responsible and is entitled to his share of the patronage of the good people of Barbourville and community. His store bore the best inspection by the pure food inspector of any alike establishment in town. The report on his stock was one throughout.

Notice to the Automobile Owners.

We are installing an air compressor, and within a few days our customers shall have air and water free at our garage. The most essential thing to you is to know that we have expert mechanics to repair your machine when you bring it to us, and one who does not experiment but works from his actual knowledge of your car. BARBOURVILLE BRICK & TILE CO.

There are few states in the Union that surpass Kentucky in enterprises and resources. She has always been a factor in the world of commerce and manufacture. Go where you may, over her broad expanse of fertile lands, and you will find the most substantial and credible industries flourishing. Situate in the heart of her most productive and valuable lands is the city of Barbourville, the best, the healthiest and most desirable place on the map in which to live. She offers every inducement that any other town can offer to those seeking a home-site, a place at which to establish a manufacturing business, or to operate a remunerative business of whatsoever nature. Among the most prominent industries that one will note about the town, or in eastern Kentucky, is the Barbourville Brick and Tile Company; which was organized in 1905, the following gentlemen composing the firm: S. B. Dishman, F. B. Dishman, W. M. Dishman and J. A. McDermott, four of the most enterprising and progressive citizens of the town. The management of the affairs of this firm is in the hands and under the supervision of Mr. McDermott, who is an experienced man in brick manufacturing. Mr. McDermott saw and realized the need for just such a plant in Barbourville, for he knew it would mean the saving of many dollars to the people of the town and community, and with his usual determination and indomitable will he set about to equip the plant with the very latest and most improved machinery in the market for the manufacture of superior grade of common building brick, and the project was received so favorably at the hands of the citizens of the town and county, in particular, that the demand for the products of this enterprise has been so great that it has required the constant operation of the plant to keep up with the orders. Not for a single day, since the fires were first started in the kiln has the company been forced to suspend work. This is a remarkable record, showing conclusively that the quality of the brick is superior to that obtainable elsewhere for the same money.

The gentlemen composing the firm are naturally gratified at the success with which they are meeting and the satisfaction their products are giving. And well they may be, for no better quality could be manufactured than the products of the Barbourville Brick & Tile Co. The capacity of the plant is 40,000 per day, and the shipments embraces all points on the L. & N. system east of the L. & C., including the L. & E. L. & N. railways.

To give the reader an idea of the operation of this plant it may be said that the brick for the building of the Whitesburg High School, Hazard High School, Bryantsville High School, Lancaster High School, Harlan High School, Williamsburg and Barbourville High Schools were supplied by this company. The contracts were not let for any of these buildings until other grades of brick were inspected, but the school trustees and officials readily saw that they could obtain better quality for less money in awarding the contracts to the Barbourville Brick & Tile Co., were not slow in placing their orders for the large number required in the construction of these imposing and prominent buildings. When the Union College of this city was built this company was awarded the contract for the brick in that building also as well as Berea and Cumberland Colleges. It requires sixty men working constantly with the most modern equipment known in brick manufacture, with every possible facility at their hands, to meet the growing demand upon the company for its superior products. Barbourville is exceedingly proud of this enterprise, and of the gentlemen composing the firm, for they are among the most highly respected and honored citizens of the community, whose reliability is never questioned, being business men and gentlemen of the highest type.

B. P. Walker

Nothing could bring a smile over the face of a man who needed the aid and guidance of a reliable merchant more than to know that he was a friend of the poor, and when Mr. B. P. Walker selected that motto he meant to live by it, and he has done so faithfully, for he handles a line of goods that are dependable in every sense of the word and charges only live-and-let live prices for all his merchandise. No man in the business has been a greater benefactor to his patrons than has Mr. Walker. When he sells you an article you can depend upon its being just as represented and worth every penny he charges for it. He is one of the town's reliable merchants, and by his fair dealing and selling at a reasonable price he has built up and maintained a business that is a credit to himself and a source of money-saving to his numerous customers. Mr. Walker is a genial, wholesome man who takes great delight in favoring any and everybody he possibly can, and who wants to be sheriff of Knox county. He is earnestly commended to you as a man of reliability and honor and in whom you can place the strictest confidence. His stock comprises practically everything, dry goods and a general line of merchandise.

BARBOURVILLE SUPPLY CO.

There is no industry in a town or city of greater value, or of more importance, than a well equipped and managed water, ice and gas plant. Barbourville can offer to new settlers one of the most modern industries of this kind in the country. Her water system is one of the best to be found in this entire section. The supply is gotten from deep wells, and piped into the city, as pure as any water that could be obtained anywhere, while the supply of natural gas is sufficient to meet the demands of a population many times larger than that of the present Barbourville. Work is being done at the present time on other prospects for additional supply of natural gas, which will warrant the bringing to this city of other industries. This gas is of the most superior quality, and the regulation of the pressure is such as to insure the patrons the best of service. The ice is manufactured from filtered water, and is the best grade possible to manufacture by modern machinery. The equipment of this plant is one of the most perfect and modern in the country.

These three commodities, water, gas and ice, are supplied the citizens of Barbourville through the Kennedy interests, of which Mr. C. P. Kennedy is manager and owner. Mr. Kennedy is a man of long experience in managing affairs of this nature, having had entire charge here for the past ten years. He is a man who is equipped to give his patrons the very best service at all times, and at the most reasonable cost. Under his proprietorship and management, the service to the citizens of the city has been eminently satisfactory, and no man could have done more toward effecting an efficient service. The city is to be congratulated on the supply and service now being given by Mr. Kennedy. The gas and water rates are exceedingly reasonable; more so, in fact, than in a majority of towns and cities throughout the country. In the past ten years in which Mr. Kennedy has been operating under a franchise, there has been no occasion for a complaint from

One year ago Edwin P. Morrow told the voters of Kentucky he was going to take the Bark off of Barksdale Hamlett, he done it, and he became Dale Hamlett and is now in the Insane Asylum. This year Chas. E. Hughes will take all the "wood" out of Woodrow Wilson and next year he will only be "Row" Wilson. Then ???

Hello! Is that you Mr. Carranza? Are you the Defecto President of Mexico? Well, this is Woodrow Wilson President of the United States of America.

Well Woodrow, what do you want?

You have some of my troopers in Carrisal as prisoners, won't you please turn them out?

No I will not.

Well if you don't I'll write you another note.

Oh go to H—

Why Sampson?

In the present contest for the Republican nomination for the Appellate Judgeship, when there are several candidates offering for the place the people want to know and indeed, they are entitled to know, for whom to vote in order that they may promote the best interest of our whole people.

The good thinking people are anxious about this matter. The voter who cast his ballot for the best men available to be chosen as our public servants and for good government is doing a righteous service to himself and his country, we are entitled to the best. The best is none too good for our mountain people: the people of Eastern Kentucky.

Flem D. Sampson is a mountain boy, born and reared in the mountains; he is one of us. He knows the needs of the good people of this Eastern Kentucky Appellate District. We can trust him: we have trusted him in the past. He has never betrayed a trust imposed in him by the people of his home county or those of his Circuit Court district. He proved himself to be a friend to our people. He has proven this to our entire satisfaction by acts and deeds as a private citizen as well as by his conduct in his official capacity as our Circuit Judge. Every one, rich and poor alike, gets a square deal in his courts.

The great mass of our good common people, voters in this Appellate District, can do no greater service to their community and the people in general, than by casting their ballots for Sampson for Appellate Judge. When he is judge of our highest court in this Commonwealth, we will have a judge of our own kind whose every heart throb is for the people of his own native mountain country. He loves the mountains and the mountain people. He caters to no click, Corporation or set of men, and when on the bench of that High Court, when elected, he will never swerve from the right by influences of any man or set of men to do other than the right. He has the courage of his convictions he is eminently qualified in the law, and his decisions rendered will be in keeping with the man and his ideals of right and justice under the law.

STANDS BY HUGHES

Roosevelt Comes Out in An Open Letter for Hughes.

Last Monday, Theodore Roosevelt came out in as strong a letter as language could possibly make it, asking all Progressives to rally to Chas. E. Hughes, the Republican Nominee President. We predicted this, and sure that Mr. Roosevelt was too great a man to let his own personal feeling stand between the people of the United States and better administration than that which we now have.

The Party is back together, better and stronger than ever before at least for the past several years; and with a united Party, there is absolutely no doubt but that the victory for the republican party in November is assured. We quote a portion of Colonel Roosevelt's letter to the Progressive National Committee, as follows:

To the Progressive National Committee:

Gentlemen—In accordance with the message I sent to the Progressive National Convention, as soon as I had received the notification that it had nominated me for President, I now communicate to you my reasons for declining the honor which I so deeply appreciate. Since the adjournment of the convention I have received between two and three thousand letters and telegrams from men who had supported me for the nomination, the majority expressing the desire that I would refuse to run, while a minority urged that I should accept the nomination. As it is a physical impossibility to answer these letters and telegrams individually, I beg of the courtesy of the senders that they will accept this public statement in lieu of such answers.

OPINION OF HUGHES.

I regard Mr. Hughes as a man whose public record is a guarantee that "he will not merely stand for a program of clean-cut straightout Americanism before election, but will resolutely and in good faith put it through if elected." He is beyond all comparison better fitted to be President than Mr. Wilson. It would be a grave detriment to the country to re-elect Mr. Wilson. I shall therefore, strongly support Mr. Hughes. Such being the case, it is unnecessary to say that I cannot accept the nomination on a third ticket. I do not believe that there should be a third ticket. I believe that when my fellow Progressives coolly consider the question they will will for the most part take this position. They and I have but one purpose—the purpose to serve our common country. It is my deep conviction that at this moment we can serve it only by supporting Mr. Hughes.

HUGHES CAREER.

Mr. Hughes has shown in his career the instinct of efficiency which will guarantee that, under him, the government will once more work with vigor and force. He possesses that habit of straightforward thinking which means that his words will be correlated with his deeds and translated into facts. His past career is the warrant for our belief that he will be the unfaltering opponent of that system of invisible government which finds expression in the domination of the party boss and the party machine. His past career is a guarantee that whatever he says before election will be made good by his acts after election. Morally, his public record shows him to be a man of unbending integrity; intellectually, it shows him to be a man of original and trained ability. We have the alternative of continuing in office an administration which has proved a lamentable failure, or of putting into office an admini-

Federal Inquiry or Railroad Strike?

Faced by demands from the conductors, engineers, firemen and brakemen that would impose on the country an additional burden in transportation costs of $100,000,000 a year, the railroads propose that this wage problem be settled by reference to an impartial Federal tribunal.

With these employes, whose efficient service is acknowledged, the railroads have no differences that could not be considered fairly and decided justly by such a public body.

Railroads Urge Public Inquiry and Arbitration

The formal proposal of the railroads to the employes for the settlement of the controversy is as follows:

"Our conferences have demonstrated that we cannot harmonize our differences of opinion and that eventually the matters in controversy must be passed upon by other and disinterested agencies. Therefore, we propose that your proposals and the proposition of the railroads be disposed of by one or the other of the following methods:

1. Preferably by submission to the Interstate Commerce Commission, the only tribunal which, by reason of its accumulated information bearing on railway conditions and its control of the revenue of the railways, is in a position to consider and protect the rights and equities of all the interests affected, and to provide additional revenue necessary to meet the added cost of operation in case your proposals are found by the Commission to be just and reasonable; or, in the event the Interstate Commerce Commission cannot, under existing laws, act in the premises, that we jointly request Congress to take such action as may be necessary to enable the Commission to consider and promptly dispose of the questions involved; or
2. By arbitration in accordance with the provisions of the Federal law" (The Newlands Act).

Leaders Refuse Offer and Take Strike Vote

Leaders of the train service brotherhoods, at the joint conference held in New York, June 1-15, refused the offer of the railroads to submit the issue to arbitration or Federal review, and the employes are now voting on the question whether authority shall be given these leaders to declare a nation-wide strike.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is proposed by the railroads as the public body to which this issue ought to be referred for these reasons:

No other body with such an intimate knowledge of railroad conditions has such an unquestioned position in the public confidence.

The rates the railroads may charge the public for transportation are now largely fixed by this Government board.

Out of every dollar received by the railroads from the public nearly one-half is paid directly to the employes as wages; and the money to pay increased wages can come from no other source than the rates paid by the public.

The Interstate Commerce Commission, with its control over rates, is in a position to make a complete investigation and render such decision as would protect the interests of the railroad employes, the owners of the railroads, and the public.

A Question For the Public to Decide

The railroads feel that they have no right to grant a wage preferment of $100,000,000 a year to these employes, now highly paid and constituting only one-fifth of all the employes, without a clear mandate from a public tribunal that shall determine the merits of the case after a review of all the facts.

The single issue before the country is whether this controversy is to be settled by an impartial Government inquiry or by industrial warfare.

Attention, Republicans.

scrutinizing the turf round about with microscopic attention by aid of his flash-lamp, seeking some sign of struggle to prove she had not left him willingly; and finding none—when a voice brought him momentarily out of his distraction.

He looked up wildly, to discover Ducroy standing over him, his stout person chastely swathed in a quilted dressing-gown with trousers, his expression one of stupefaction.

"Well, monsieur—well?" the minister of war demanded irritably. "What—I repeat—are you doing there?"

Lanyard essayed response, choked up, and gulped. He rose and stood swaying, showing a stricken face, but for the moment couldn't speak.

"Zh?" Ducroy insisted, with an accent of exasperation. "Why do you stand glaring at me like that—eh? Come, monsieur; what ails you? I have arranged everything, I say. Where is mademoiselle?"

Lanyard made a broken gesture.

"She is gone," he muttered forlornly. Instantly the countenance of the stout Frenchman was lighted with a gleam of eager interest—romance lover that he was—and he stepped nearer, peering closely into the face of the adventurer.

"Gone?" he echoed. "Mademoiselle? Your sweetheart, eh?"

Lanyard assented with a disconsolate nod and sigh. Impatiently Ducroy caught him by the sleeve.

"Come!" he insisted, tugging—"come at once into the house. Now, monsieur—now at length you enlist all one's sympathies! Come, I say! Is it your desire that I catch my death of cold?"

Indifferently Lanyard suffered himself to be led away. He was, indeed, barely conscious of what was happening. All his being was possessed by the thought that she had forsaken him.

CHAPTER XXII.

Enigma.

Lanyard had found no reason to believe that Lucy had left him otherwise than voluntarily, or that their adventures at the homes of Mme. Amber and M. Ducroy had been noted by spies of the Pack. The testimony of his own wife assured him that they hadn't been followed at any time subsequent to leaving the Rue des Acacias; their way had been too long and purposely too involved, and his vigilance too lively for that. Left to herself there in the garden for a quarter-hour, she had been free to think independently for almost the first time since she had descended from the studio.

Then, horror overmastering her, she had fled the garden—wildly, blindly, he didn't doubt—and probably had sought refuge in some obscure hotel till morning. What then? She had neither money nor any friends in Paris, but had mentioned some personal jewelry she planned to pawn.

That would be her first move, then, to a pawnbroker's, where he must seek her—not to force himself again upon her, but to follow at a distance and watch over her, to ward off any attempt on Bannan's part to interfere.

The government pawnshop had its attraction for Lanyard as well; he was there before the doors were open for the day—was the first to enter; and fortified by loans negotiated on his watch, cigarette case, and a ring or two, retired to a nearby cafe which commanded a view of the entrance to the establishment on the Rue des Blancs-Manteaux and settled himself against a day-long vigil.

It wasn't easy; drowsiness buzzed in his brain and weighted his eyelids; now and again, involuntarily, he nodded over his glass of black coffee. And when evening came and the doors of the pawnshop were closed for the night he roused himself, telling himself that possibly he had napped a little without his knowledge and thus had missed her visit.

Engaging obscure lodgings close by the Rue des Acacias, he slept till nearly noon of the following day, then rose to put into execution a design which had sprung full-winged from his brain at the moment of awakening.

He had his car and a chauffeur's license of long standing in the name of Pierre Lamier—was free, in short, to cruise at will the streets of Paris without lawful let or hindrance. And with the aid of a few judicious selections from the stock of a second-hand clothing shop and of a few other purchases at a chemist's, he felt tolerably sure that it would need keen eyes—whether the Pack's or the prefecture's—to identify Pierre Lamier with either Michael Lanyard or the Lone Wolf.

By the close of the third day he reluctantly conceded that she must have managed to escape from Paris without his aid.

Then he began to suspect that Bannan had fled Paris as well, for the most diligent investigation he was able to pursue unobscured failed to unearth the least clue to the movements of the American subsequent to the fire at Troyon's.

Now, toward midnight of that same third day, Lanyard was driving slowly westward on the Boulevard de la Madeleine when a limousine of familiar aspect rounded a corner half a block ahead and, drawing up in front of Viel's, discharged four passengers.

The first was Wertheimer, and at sight of his rather striking figure, arrayed for the evening in apparel from Bond street, Lanyard slackened speed. Turning as he alighted, the Englishman offered his hand to a young woman. She jumped down to the sidewalk in radiant attire and temper, laughing like a delighted child.

Involuntarily Lanyard stopped his car, and a chauffeur driving immediately to the rear, swerving out to escape collision, shot past, cursing him liberally, while a sergent de ville scowled darkly and uttered an imperative word.

Lanyard pulled himself together somehow and drove on.

The girl was just then passing into the restaurant through the revolving door, Wertheimer attending her, while De Morbihan had alighted from the car and was lending a solicitous arm to Bannan.

But to these last Lanyard paid little attention. Quite automatically he passed Viel's, rounded the Madeleine, and turned up the Boulevard Malesherbes. Paris and all its brisk midnight traffic swung by without claiming a tithe of his attention—he was mainly conscious of lights that reeled dizzily round him, like a multitude of staring, malicious, mocking eyes.

At the junction with the Boulevard Haussmann a second sergent de ville roused him with a warning about careless driving. He went more sanely thereafter, but with a heart of utter wretchedness—his eyes still wore a dazed expression, and now and again he shook his head impatiently, as though to rid it of a swarm of tormenting thoughts.

So it seemed he had all along been her dupe; that all the while he had been ostentatiously shielding her from harm and diffidently showing her every evidence of his devotion she had been laughing in her sleeve and planning to return with her report of a fool self-hoodwinked to the service she had pretended to despise.

A great anger welled in his bosom.

Turning round, he made back to the Boulevard de la Madeleine, and on one pretext and another contrived to haunt the neighborhood of Viel's until the party came out, something after one o'clock.

It was evident they had supped merrily; the girl showed every sign of the gayest humor; Wertheimer seemed a bit exhilarated, De Morbihan was plainly much amused, and even Bannan—bearing heavily on the Frenchman's arm—was chuckling appreciatively. The party piled back into De Morbihan's limousine and were driven up the Avenues des Champs-Élysées, pausing at the Elysée Palace hotel to drop Bannan and the girl—his daughter?—whoever she was!

Whether it went thereafter Lanyard didn't trouble to ascertain. He drove morosely home and went to bed, though not to sleep for many hours—bitterness of disillusion ate like an acid into his heart.

CHAPTER XXIII.

No Solution.

Because his money was fast ebbing and motives of prudence alone—if none more worthy—forbade an attempt to replenish his pocketbook by revisiting the little place in the Rue Roget and realizing on the treasures there, he had determined to have a taximeter fitted to his car and ply for hire until time or chance should settle the question of his future.

Already, indeed, he had complied with the police regulations, received permission to convert his machine into a taxicab, and arranged to have the clock installed.

Leaving his car before noon at the designated depot, he received the promise that it would be ready for him at four o'clock. Returning at that hour, he learned that it couldn't be ready before six. Facing wearily two hours with nothing to do, and too bored and restless to wile them away in a cafe, he idled listlessly hither and yon along streets and boulevards—indifferent, in the black melancholy oppressing him, whether or not he were recognized.

In the course of his wanderings he found himself turning from the Rue St. Honoré through the Place Vendôme to the Rue de la Paix.

Before one corner window Lanyard paused involuntarily.

In that window there was a mirror, set at an angle to one side, and suddenly Lanyard caught its presentment of himself—a gaunt and hungry apparition, with a wolfish air, he had never worn when rejoicing in the richest of wolf, his eyes staring with predatory luster.

And lost some passer-by he struck by this betrayal, he turned and moved on hastily.

Half-way across the Boulevard des Capucines, to the east of the Opera, he leaped for his life from a murderous-minded taxicab, found himself temporarily marooned upon one of those isles of safety which the Parisian calls "thank-Gods," and stood waiting until an opening should offer in the congestion of traffic and permit him to gain the farther sidewalk.

Presently the policeman in the middle of the boulevard signaled with his little white wand, and the stream of east-bound vehicles checked and began to close up to the right of the crossing, upon which they encroached jealously. A taxicab on the outside, next the island, overshot the mark, and, obedient to a curt word from the sergent, pulled up sharply and began to back into place. Before Lanyard could move round it its window had drawn opposite him and he was staring in, transfixed by a casual glance.

There was sufficient light to enable him to see clearly the face of the passenger—its pale oval and the eyes whose gaze clung to his with an effect of confused fascination.

She sat quite motionless until one white-gloved hand moved uncertainly toward her bosom.

That brought him to; unconsciously lifting his cap, he stepped back a pace and started to move on.

But at that she bent quickly forward and unlatched the door. It swung wide to him.

Hardly knowing what he was doing, he accepted the mute invitation, stepped into the cab, took the empty seat beside her, and closed the door.

Almost at once the block was lifted, and the car moved on with a jerk, the girl sinking back into her corner with a suggestion of breathlessness, as though the effort she made to seem composed had been almost too much for her strength.

Her face, turned to Lanyard in the half-light, appeared immobile, expressionless; only her eyes were alert with anticipation. But she said nothing.

On his part, Lanyard felt himself hopelessly confounded, in the grasp of emotions that would scarcely suffer him to speak. A great wonder obsessed his mind that she should have opened the door to him no less than that he should have entered through it. Dimly he understood that both had acted without premeditation, and he asked himself: "Was she already regretting that momentary weakness—or whatever it had been?"

"Why did you do that?" he heard himself demand abruptly, and felt that his voice sounded harsh, strained, unnatural.

She stiffened slightly, with a nervous movement of her shoulders.

"Because I saw you."

"Did you want to talk to me, perhaps?" he prompted.

"I was surprised; I had hoped—believed—you had left Paris."

She surveyed his costume with a curious glance, perplexed.

"Why are you dressed that way? Is it a disguise?"

"A pretty good one—as a matter of fact, the national costume of one in my present station in life."

"But you are wrong. I recognized you instantly, didn't I? And those others—they're as keen-witted as I—certainly! Oh, you should not have stopped in Paris!"

"I couldn't go without knowing what had become of you."

"I was afraid of that," she confessed. "Then why—"

"Oh, I know what you're going to say! Why did I run away from you?" Then, since he said nothing, she continued unhappily: "I can't tell you. I mean, I don't know how to tell you!"

She kept her face averted, sat gazing blankly out of the window; but when he remained mute and unresponsive—in point of fact not knowing what to say—she turned to look inquiringly at him, and the glare of a passing lamp showed him her countenance profoundly distressed, her mouth tense, brows knitted, eyes clouded with perplexity and appeal.

And of a sudden, seeing her so tormented and so piteous, his indignation ebbed, and with it all his doubts of her; dimly he divined that there was something behind this dark fabric of mystery and inconsistency that, however inexplicable it might seem to him, excused all her apparent faithlessness and instability of character and purpose. He couldn't look upon this girl and listen to her voice and believe that she wasn't at heart as sound and sweet and tender and loyal as any that ever breathed!

A wave of tenderness and compassion swept his heart, and he realized that he didn't matter, that nothing mattered so long as she was spared one slightest pang of self-reproach.

He said very gently: "I wouldn't have you distress yourself on my account, Miss Shannon. I quite understand there must be things I can't understand—that you must have had your reasons for acting as you did."

"Yes," she said evenly, but again with eyes averted—"I had; but they're not easy, they're impossible to explain to you."

"Yet—when all's said and done—I've no right to exact any explanation."

"Ah, but how can you say that, remembering what we've been through together?"

"You owe me nothing," he insisted, "whereas I owe you everything, even unquestioning faith. Even though I fail, I have this to thank you for—this one not ignoble impulse my life has known."

"You mustn't say that; you mustn't think it. I don't deserve it. You wouldn't say it—if you knew—"

"Perhaps I can guess enough to satisfy myself."

She gave him a swift, sidelong look of challenge, instinctively on the defensive.

With a curt, resigned inclination of the head Lanyard rose and got out.

Immediately the girl grasped the speaking-tube, the door slammed, the cab drew away, and left him standing with the pose, the gesture of one who has just heard sentence of death pronounced on him.

When he roused to know his surroundings he found himself standing on a corner of the Avenue du Bois de Boulogne.

It was bitter cold in the wind sweeping down from the west, and it had grown very dark. Only in the sky above the Bois a long reef of crimson light hung motionless, against which the leafless trees of the avenue lifted their gnarled, weird silhouettes.

While he watched the crimson ebbed swiftly and gave way to mauve, to violet, to black.

Big Meeting to Start.

A series of meetings will be held at the First M. E. Church, beginning next Sunday, conducted by Rev. C. A. Bromley, the pastor, assisted by Rev. E. A. Hobbs, of Lerna, Ill. The singing will be conducted by a strong singer, who will arrive the first of the week. It is thought that the meeting will be removed from the church to a tent so as to make it as comfortable as possible.

Dangerously Shot.

Clyde, the seven-year-old son of Mr. W. M. McVey, of Anchor, while playing with his brother, on last Wednesday, was accidentally shot through the bowels. It was thought that he could not live but a short time. He was brought at once to Dr. Logan's office and was operated upon, which operation is pronounced a success as the boy is well on his way to recovery. It is just as we have said many times, Barbourville has as good as there is of everything, including Doctors.

If this boy had been taken to some Doctor in some large city where they would have done the same thing as Dr. Logan did, the people would be ready to say something of what a wonderful operation it was. Why not say these good things of our home-folks?

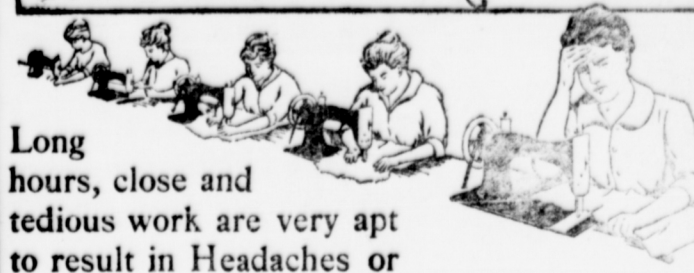

Now a Doctor of Philosophy.

Rev. C. A. Bromley received his degree of Ph. D. last week from Milton University, of Baltimore, Md. He has worked hard and has merited the honor conferred.

June 29th, 1916.
Hon. Fiscal Court of Knox Co.,
Barbourville, Ky.
Gentlemen:

In rejecting the Middle Fork route thru Knox County I wish to say that not only does the plans and profiles indicate that practically as cheap a line can be constructed on either route as is shown of the Middle Fork survey, but also that the population served by the Middle Fork survey is very much less and touches a section of the country that is otherwise served by good means of transportation, leaving the Big Richland Creek route at a point near the railroad and running thru a section of country that is very sparsely settled and back to the railroad in order to parallel same. While the Indian Creek route, which I have previously recommended for survey shows that a larger population is served, and that a more equitable distribution of the funds for road building is made by serving the Indian Creek country.

The same statements will apply to the Artemus route as against the Fighting Creek route in your county. I would therefore suggest that your court approve the Fighting Creek route and the Indian Creek route, as shown by the plans and profiles submitted to this office. Same will be approved immediately upon receipt of a court order authorizing their approval. The adoption of the Artemus route along the railroad is hereby rejected by this order, and the court is authorized to reconvene and reconsider and re-submit routes suitable for approval.

This is justified by the estimates and by the reports of all the Engineers who have visited the route, as well as personal inspection the routes except the Middle Fork Route by the writer himself who now relies upon the report of the Engineers and general information relative to this route.

Yours truly,
ROBERT C. TERRELL,
Commissioner of Public Roads.

MOWERS AND RAKES

These Mowers and Rakes were bought before the advance and enables me to sell them at the old price. The McCormick is the best machine on the market to-day and I can prove it by the Farmers, as they are the ones that use them. The statistics show that 65% of the mowers in use today are McCormicks. Also I have been lucky in buying Two Carloads of COLUMBUS Wagons before the advance which I am selling at the old price. Every wagon is guaranteed against bad material and workmanship and is backed up by one of the strongest Companies in the United States, The International Harvester Co., with a guarantee for one year. They are so well built and have such good material in them that I have had but one wheel brought back to me in four years that had give way in that time. I would be glad to show you how much stronger and more durable my wagons are built over all other wagons and then let you be your own judge. When in town call around and see for yourself and be convinced.

One of Barbourville's Boys.

We have heard with much delight of the efforts of one of the boys who completed his education at Union College this year, and has gone out in the world to battle for the Master.

C. P. Swearingner, who came to Union College sometime ago completed his course in this month, and married one of Barbourville's sweetest and best girls, in the person of Miss Odis Fuller, and has already assisted in holding a great revival in Germantown, Ky., assisting Rev. J. F. Ruggles. One of the comments on Rev. Swearingner read as follows: "Bros. Swearingner is a splendid young preacher with a keen intellect and a high Christian character, and a recent graduate of Union College of Barbourville. Mrs. Swearingner will also be a feature in the meeting." Barbourville and Union College has sent many out into the world who have made a splendid record, and we hope that some day young Swearingner will reach the climax, and be a Bishop.

Miss Martha Albright and Stewart Miller are being entertained at a house party given by Mrs. W. R. Shelton in Morristown Tenn.

We clip the following from the Morristown Sun:

One of the most brilliant affairs of the week was a reception given on Wednesday evening by Mrs. W. R. Shelton, at her residence on East Main street, when about sixty guests were bidden to meet her house guests, Misses Martha Albright and Stuart Doak Miller, of Barbourville, Ky., and Mr. Hermon White of Decatur, Ga. The home was most beautifully decorated for the occasion, the color motif of pink and green being carried out throughout. The guests were met by a receiving line composed of Mrs. W. R. Shelton, Mrs. Crockett Hale, Misses Irene Shelton, Martha Albright, Stuart Doak Miller, and Mr. Hermon White. An hour of forty-two was enjoyed by all, after which the guests were conducted to the dining room, where a buffet lunch was served. The beautiful picture table was gracefully presided over by Mrs. G. K. Murphy, who served a dainty pink and green ices tastefully decorated with sweet peas of the corresponding colors and lady fingers, and Mrs. Edward Myers, who dispensed the punch. The centerpiece of the table was a huge bouquet of sweet peas, arranged on a handpainted cloth done in pink and white sweet peas. From the chandelier above the table, were suspended silver chains and pink satin intertwined with sweet peas. Assisting in the dining room were Mesdames Lynn Sheeley, Crockett Hale, T. S. Myers and W. R. Shelton.

Explained.

Needless to say, this story was told by a Kentuckian, says the Pittsburgh Dispatch. A visitor to heaven was being shown around by St. Peter. After he had made a circuit and admired the streets of gold and the singing birds and the beautiful flowers and was about to go out of the gate again, he noticed a group of men over in the corner, tied together, looking very disconsolate.

"Why, who are those men over there?" he asked St. Peter in surprise.

"Oh," said St. Peter, "those? Those are Kentuckians."

"But what are they chained up for?" asked the visitor.

"We have to keep them tied up," said St. Peter, frowning. "If we didn't they'd all go right back."

Killing On Stinking Creek.

Last Sunday at the Church on Stinking Creek at the Allen Messer place, there came up an altercation between Lincoln Taylor and Allen Messer, Jr. and weapons were drawn, and a battle ensued, and after the smoke had cleared away, it was found that Taylor had been shot several times. We have not as yet learned of the particulars; except that it was the kindling of the old coal that was caused by some trouble heretofore.

NOT ENOUGH CHILDREN

ever receive the proper balance of food to sufficiently nourish both body and brain during the growing period when nature's demands are greater than in mature life. This is shown in so many pale faces, lean bodies, frequent colds, and lack of ambition.

For all such children we say with unmistakable earnestness: They need Scott's Emulsion, and need it now. It possesses in concentrated form the very food elements to enrich their blood. It changes weakness to strength; it makes them sturdy and strong. No alcohol.

his many patrons, and it is confidently hoped by his friends that he will continue at the head of the several companies, for they realize that in the person of Mr. Kennedy they have a sagacious business man; a gentleman of experience, as well as one of reliability, who is ever ready to do all in his power to please his customers.

Barbourville may justly feel proud of her water and gas systems under the present management, as it is all that could be asked or expected. It is a perfect system, and the supplies sold at as reasonable a rate as it is possible to operate, and maintain the business. The Barbourville Supply Company handles piping, tiling and all kinds of building supplies. It also handles gasoline and oils. Mr. Kennedy has about completed negotiations to bring to this city a plant for the manufacture of gasoline, which will make Barbourville a distributing point for gasoline and oils, and also automobile accessories, for all points along the Dixie Highway.

Mr. Kennedy, through the Barbourville Supply Co., is agent here for the Chevrolet and Chalmers cars, two of the best known automobiles in the market.

Judge Flem D. Sampson.

In making a comprehensive review of Barbourville, it is necessary to mention Judge F. D. Sampson, of the Circuit Court. Judge Sampson was born in Laurel county, Ky., in the year 1876, of American parentage. He has been a resident of Knox county since 1890, and has always been foremost in the betterment of the community, and the uplift of Barbourville. He received his early education at London Seminary, afterward entering Valparaiso College of Law, from which he graduated with honors in 1884. Being a man of scholarly attainments and affable in manner he soon won a place in the hearts of all with whom he came in contact, as well as eliciting the highest admiration. There are few men in the county better known or more highly esteemed than is Judge Sampson. Agreeable in manners, pleasing in address and affable at all times he is a friend to thousands, and a foe to none. His election to the judgeship five years ago, was a signal honor of his qualifications to hold the position with credit to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. No man could have given more universal satisfaction.

He has shown his capability in a marked degree. He was sought and found by his party just at a time when it needed him and his rulings have been fair, just and above criticism, for by the careful and studious consideration of all cases before him, and the lucid fairness of his decisions, he has gained an enviable place in the judiciary of Eastern Kentucky. That he has been an efficient custodian of the people's right; a man greatly admired, a man of the deepest convictions and untarnished record, and one in whom the poor and needy ever have a friend, and the wayfarer a counsellor who endeavors to open up before his eyes a better and brighter life, and that he is giving absolute satisfaction is never questioned by his constituency. His friends are numbered almost by his acquaintances.

Judge Sampson is a candidate for the office of Judge of the Court of Appeals, 7th Appellate district, and there is no question in the minds of all thinking people about his election. He is the winning candidate, and his presence in this tribunal of justice will add grace, dignity and brilliancy that could not be surpassed in the country.

Read P. Black

Of the many aspirants seeking re-election to their office, and those who are asking support of their friends and constituents for another, none has more friends or is more generally popular than is Mr. Read P. Black, who is now serving his second term as County Court Clerk, but who has announced his candidacy for the office of sheriff of Knox county. A young man full of vim and energy and in possession of all the qualifications that especially equip him for the office to which he seeks, makes him one of the most prominent candidates in the field, and it can be said without fear of contradiction, that if he is elected the affairs of his office will be conducted in such admirable manner that no one will have the slightest occasion to rebuke himself for supporting him in the election. Mr. Black is a man of the highest sense of honor and a gentleman with it; one whom his friends love, and no one dislikes. He has a most magnanimous disposition, and a character that is above attack or reproach; a heart that is as the world in which he lives; a friend to the poor and needy and a man of sterling worth; reliable, trustworthy, courteous to every one at all times and obliging to a degree of fault, if such is possible. Thus may the characteristics of the subject of this little sketch be summed up, or enumerated. He is worthy of it all, and if he is placed, as he will be, before the voters of Knox county for re-election to the office of sheriff, there is possibly not a man in the country who could poll a larger vote. His friends and admirers are predicting for him a "walk-over", and few men could fill the position more creditably than can Read Black.

A noteworthy fact in the career of Troop "A" Kentucky

Cavalry during the Spanish-American war. He was afterward Captain of the Barbourville military company, then known as the state guard. During the Jamestown exposition he was a member of the Powhatan Guards and one of the four men selected to act as personal guard to President Roosevelt during his visit to the exposition. He always answered the call, and would willingly join the forces and take a hand in the trouble in Mexico if his services were called on.
